Critical Analysis " Ferdinand Oyono's Houseboy. Ferdinand Oyono begins his haunting tragedy at the end of a Cameroonian houseboy's life. "Brother, what are we," Toundi Onduo asks as he enjoys his last arki, only minutes before his death, "what are we blackmen who are called French?" It is a question that echoes throughout the novel.

"One new man" is a metaphor for the church but, in spite of its apparent simplicity, two diametrically opposing views of its nature appear in the literature.

One New Man - First Fruits of Zion

Imagine a man comparing himself to a dog and comparing a white man to be a king. We Africans have to change our mentality and value ourselves. Once again, I will say Ferdinand Oyono is a great Author with so many texts he has published such as The Old Man and the Medal, and so on.

While the four novels discussed in this chapter: Arrow of God (1964), One Man, One Matchet (1964), Houseboy (1956) and Climbié (1956) are far more recent than those analysed in Chapter 3, they demonstrate a similar but more subtle treatment of stereotypes. This difference in nuance seems to arise primarily from the pattern of ambivalence in the African image of Europeans, as well as the fact that they were written in the few years preceding and following independence.
